

Debriefing

The purpose of this study was to examine how the framing of an interaction partner as an AI versus human influences people's trust, empathy, and perceived social presence during online personal conversations. In this experiment, some conversations were framed as being human-AI interactions, and others as being between two humans. However, all conversations were fictional and created specifically for this study using ChatGPT-5.2.

We apologise for the necessary deception used in this study. Deception was essential to maintain validity of our experimental manipulation. We hope you understand the rationale behind this decision.

We were also interested in how individual differences (such as loneliness, mental wellbeing, interoceptive awareness, AI familiarity and social motivation) relate to these reactions.

Understanding these factors gives insight into why and how people may respond differently to online social partners, informing future research surrounding AI use.

Thank you again! Your participation in this study will be kept completely confidential.
